Monday night, 18th June, settlers burned a mosque in the village of Jaba, north of Jerusalem, and caused damage in the area.

Palestinian sources said that settlers sprayed Anti-Palestinian and Islamic graffiti at the mosque's walls.

Hebrew-language media sources published that the Israeli police in Jerusalem said this incident was made by the Israeli right-wing extremists that are known as the "price tag", which is an increasingly used slogan, referring to the retribution they say they will exact if the Israeli government attempts to freeze settlement construction in the West Bank
